

Unusual activity, explained

What a big print means

The print that stands out

A single large options trade that breaks from the day's flow. Big size, odd strike, near-dated expiry. The tape flags it because it does not look like everything else.

Conviction with a deadline

Someone paid real money for exposure that expires. That is conviction with an expiration date attached. It is always worth noticing, and never worth blindly following.

Direction is not always clear

A big call buy could hedge a short position. Multi-leg prints can look directional and be neutral. Always check the legs before reading intent into size.

A clue, not a signal

One print is a clue. Size plus side plus context is a story. And even then, the buyer can be wrong. Flow is information, not prophecy.

Verified flow.
Zero hype.

Follow @zerogammarsearch
zerogammarsearch.com